SATURDAY, APRIL 12. A New Book on Hawaii.

LONDON, Dec. 1st, 1878. A book, containing several chapters on a visit to Hawaii, has just been published in Germany, and I have procured a copy in order to report thereon to the ADVERTISER. It is called " Voyage across the Pacific " (Reise durch den Stillen Ozean), and its author is Dr. Max Buchner, who travelled from New Zealand via Fiji and Hawaii to San Francisco. The headings of the chapters referring to Hawaii will give a fair idea of their Chap. XVIII.-Honolulu. Arrival. First impressions. History and ethnology. Sightseeing. The Government, Parliament and military. Americans and Germans. The Chinese. Climate and salubrity. The lepers. The Fishmarket. The environs. Ride to the Pali. Chap. XIX .- From Honolulu to Hilo. H. R. H. Ruth Keelikolani. Morning toilet of the travellers. Lahaina and Kawaihae. The hotel at Hilo. Our Commissioner of amusements. Hapai. Surf-swimming. School-girls bathing. Hula-hula and concert. The Rainbow Falls. Chap. XX .- Ascent of Kilauea. Wild detages. The boiling lava cauldron. Moonshine and hell. Difficult descent to Puna. Frozen lava streams and caved-in lava domes. Captain Springs. Awa and breadfruit. Back to Hilo. Chap. XXI.-From Hilo to Honolulu. Strange death-wake. Captain Spencer and his sugar plantation. The Kilauea comes not. A Hawaian supper and farewell to Hilo. Nocturnal member of the press. The baker of Labaina. Stormy weather. At last at Honolulu.

Chap. XXIII .- From Honolulu to San Francisco. The Zealandia. Farewell to the Happy

The author arrived at Honolulu Aug. 16th, 1876, by the City of New York. His first impression was the striking resemblance between the natives and the Maories, whom he found to be exactly the same race, only that the Hawaiians have become more refined in mien and figure by their paradisaical climate. There is, however, less justice in his remark, that " while the Viti and Maori languages sound soft and musical, like the Italian, the Hawaiian is rough and barbarous." It will also interest Honolulu people to know that their streets are all broad and cross at right angles like a chessboard, and of Honolulu roosters during the whole night. He is not partial to the Chinese, and comes to the alarming, but under present circumstances sensible conclusion, that " before long the waves of this ugly race, with its disgusting vices, will close over the beautiful and noble native race." He calls the climate simply perfect on the "happy islands" of the Pacific. His approbation, as a medical man, of the hospital and lunatic asylum is of value. He also praises Hawaiian horses for their strength and toughness, and says Mark Twain has vilely calumniated them. The Doctor left Honolulu, five days after his arrival, on the old Kilauea for the windward ports. Princess Luka was also on board, but he gives no very favorable description of her. Governor Kipi, however, he calls an " exceedingly dignified and decent-looking, strong old gentle-man, in faultless European dress." The chief difference between the native women in the cabin barefooted. He says there are only three broand regrets that this noble pastime is falling into disuse. He visited the crater on August 25th, and compares it at night to Paris on fire under the Commune. The sulphur bath he considers a torture, which is strange. The Volcano House, however, comes in for his unqualified praise, and being a German, he particularly mentions the Bremen bottled beer. He then descended through Puna to Kapoho, and says Captain Eldart's charming children are a favorable argument for

On September 1st, the Kilauca not having arrived on her round trip, and being anxious to eatch the San Francisco steamer, he started from Hilo in a whaleboat, with several English companions and a native crew. They paid $50 to be taken to Kohala, where they expected to meet a schooner, and that not being the case, $65 more to Honolulu, together with the promise to send the boat and crew back to Hilo by the steamer or first schooner. They crossed Alenuihaha channel safely, and made a landing on Maui, not far from Maslaca, where they met a native fishing party. Among them the Doctor noticed a tall, handsome man, who seemed to be their leader. "Sharp, intelligent features, a well-cultivated Louis Quatre beard and carefully-parted hair, gave him the air of an elegant French brigadier of gens-darmes." In fluent English he asked for their names and the particulars of their trip, saying he was correspondent of a native paper at Honolulu. Do any Hawaiians recognize the por-trait? At Lahaina the Doctor made the acquaintance of a countryman, a fat baker from Bavaris. After a stormy passage across the channels the whaleboat arrived safely at Honolulu. (This feat was noticed at the time in the P. C. Advertiser.) The agents of the Kilauca not only returned one-half of the prepaid passage money, but even undertook to return the whaleboat and native crew back to Hilo free of charge -a courtesy, says the Doctor, which he should never expect of an American or European steamship company. With his companions he was also introduced to the King by Governor Dominis. On being asked whether he would ever visit Europe, King Kalakaua smiled and shrugged his shoulders, as if to say, "I should like to, but-." On September 12th the author regretfully left " the Happy Isles " on board of the Zealandia. Looking aside from the inaccuracies of a superficial observer, his book is an interesting account of a brief visit to Hawaii nei.

the mingling of German with Polynesian blood.

Captain Spencer, at Hilo, he considers remarkable for his great personal strength and for the vast number of his half-caste children. He also says he saw a native at Hilo with blue-gray eyes and light hair, whom he would have taken for a European if not told that he was a kanaka maole.

DESTRUCTION OF HER FORESTS AND WHAT IT WILL INVOLVE-WHAT THE NEW YORK " NATION'

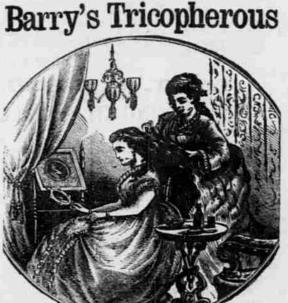

sical necessity for preserving the forests greater than in California; nowhere has the world seen its forests so rapidly and senselessly destroyed. We will briefly examine what the dangers are which threaten California, and what should be undertaken to prevent or at least diminish them. All along the western slope of the Sierras numerous rivers head, which flowing westward through the rich foothills and great plains of California, fall into the Sacramento and the San Joaquin, the one flowing south and the other north, and at length emptying into the bay of San Francisco. Through these rivers must pass all the moisture, not absorbed by the soil, which the Sierras attracts from the ocean lying almost at its feet. The annual precipitation of moisture in these mountains, although almost exclusively confined to the winter months, is still very large, a fall of sixty feet of snow during an exceptional severe winter having been reported in the high Sierras. It results that during the summer months, when the snow is melting these mountain streams become large and rapid rivers, carrying off immense volumes of water, and then almost entirely disappearing with the snow. As they are not replenished by summer rains, the length of their annual duration must depend on the slowness with which the snow at their sources melts. It is a well established fact that snow parture. Half-way house at Oloa. The Crater melts much less rapidly, and that much more of opens up. The Volcano House and its advanities absorbed in the forest than in the open ground; while the forests on a mountain side offers great mechanical resistance, especially by their undergrowth and coating of fallen leaves, Eldarts and his ranch, Kapoho. The Warm to the rapid running off of water or melting snow. If the forests of the Sierra are destroyed, their annual snow fall will probably not be materially diminished. The length of time, however, required to melt it will be much shorter; and the absorbing power of the forest being gone, boat trip to Kohala. Conflict with the Sabbath the volume of water passing through the rivers and off again. Ashore at Maui. An interesting will be greatly increased. It is not difficult to foretell the results. Every season, earlier at the south, later at the north, torrents more terrible and more destructive than the history of the world records, will carry during a few weeks fore the King. Festal preparations. Bath in death and desolation from the mountain sides the Kapena. Dancing pleasures. The Anglodebris and holding the cities lying along the low banks of the larger rivers at their mercy. And then, when this terrible rush of a few days is over, if will be found that the whole supply of water for the summer is exhausted. The foothills and the plain will no longer produce fruits or vegetables, or any summer crop for which irrigation is essential, for no water to Irrigate with will come down from the mountains. " Placer mining " will be a thing of the past, and even the navigation of the great rivers will be either interrupted or abandoned. During the last fifty years more than one country in Europe has been visited by calamities similar in origin and extent to those which now threaten California, but in none of them were the physical reasons for the danger so great. The mountains from which the destructive torrents of Europe have sprung are lower than the Sierra, less heavily forest-elad, and enjoying a more regular that their gardens shine in a fresh green, thanks to the plenteous supply of water. He is certainly right again when he says that the Government library at Aliiolani is surprisingly rich for so

There is but one remedy for the dangers we precipitation of moisture with a much smaller snowfall, and so less able to produce sudden and isolated a place. Mr. Berger is referred to as foretell, and on its adoption depends the future follows: "The leader of the Royal Band is of California. A strip of forest must be set aside naturally a German, and his band does him along the western slope of the Sierra extensive great credit." He then gives an account of a enough to secure the natural flow of the rivers, and these reservations must be strictly guarded BAR AND FLAT IRON, lilo, who, he says, introduced general military from fire, the ax and especially from all browsing duty, during which the infantry made a bayonet animals. It is in her boasted millions of sheep attack on the cavalry and killed 40 horses and | that California's greatest danger lies. These, 20 riders and wounded the rest. It seems some- with countless herds of other browsing animals, body must have " sold " the Doctor badly. He are driven up every summer from the plains into does not forget to mention the continual crowing the mountains to feed during the dry season. The damage they are inflicting in the Sierra forests is terrible and indescribable. One can ride for days at a certain elevation through the mountains along the sheep trails without seeing outside of the rare ranch enclosures a single uninjured shrub or seedling tree of any sort. Everything the sheep can reach is eaten clean. This means that there is nothing left of the forest but its older trees, and that it has lost or is fast losing its best element for holding back melted snow; and it means, too, that there are no new trees coming on to take the place in their turn of their parents. As the number of animals driven to the mountains increases, forest fires increase also, set by the shepherds either accidentally or purposely to increase the next year's feed. A forest annually wasted by fire, on which the ax is always making terrible inroads, and in which no young trees are allowed to spring up is clearly doomed. When that of the Sierra, the noblest and those on deck he believes to be, that the for- of our continent, has gone, nothing will stand mer wear shoes and stockings and the latter go between California and the dangers which threaten her. To preserve California is the first and there at Hilo who understand surf-swimming, greatest duty of American forestry. The task is a difficult one, but it can be accomplished if her
